George O'Brien, who was so badly scalded by the explosion of a traction engine at Idaho, in Pike county, last Friday, died of his injuries yesterday. O'Brien was engineer, and his escape from instant death was miraculous. He was badly bruised and scalded, the flesh falling off his body in many places. It was first thought that he had suffered no internal injuries, but it soon became evident that there was little hope for his recovery. He was unconscious most of the time and lingered along in awful agony until death came to him as a friend.

O'Brien lived in Rarden, this county. This is the third victim of the explosion, Taylor Myer and Charles Willis being instantly killed at the time of the explosion.

CHANGED PLANS.

A. Brunner Will Not Build Another Story to the Building Now Occupied by Him.

Chas. Brunner, of the A. Brunner store, says that the firm has decided not to build another story to their store building as stated in the TIMES a few days ago. They will, however, cut out the wall between their present quarters and the building formerly occupied by I. F. Coriell, which Mr. Brunner owns, and join the two buildings by means of arches. A small space in the rear of the present building will also be built up. Work will be commenced in a few days and the job pushed rapidly. Alex Glockner will also build on the vacant space in the rear of his store thus making a solid block.

THE LADIES PLAYED CARDS.

A Delightful Event in Honor of Miss Barr's Guest, Miss Means, of Maysville, Ky.

Miss Sallie Barr was the hostess of a very delightful afternoon card party yesterday. It was given in honor of her visitor, Miss Lena Means, of Maysville, Ky. Brown won twelve, and was awarded the first prize, a beautiful Dresden china plate. Mrs. Geo. Anderson stood second, and was awarded a dainty doylie. A very refreshing lunch was served after the games, and the ladies all pronounced it a very pleasant and successful affair.

HE BROKE HIS PROMISE

And Is Now Pounding Stone to Liquidate an Old Fine—In Mayor's Court.

The mayor's court docket this morning was blank, no arrests having been made last night. One young man was locked up yesterday on an execution. William McDowell was fined $4.80 for intoxication about a month ago and pleaded hard for time to pay up and escape the stone pile. He failed to keep his promises and was brought in to serve his time. He was "under the influence" when arrested. He joined the stone pile gang this morning.

She was carried into the house of a neighbor and a doctor sent for.

A Correction.

In the report of the council proceedings yesterday, the TIMES was in error in stating that the bill of Jacob Bower for putting in a sewer in the East End was $50. It should have been $30, or $11.50 more than the contract price.

Oscar Finney, who has been sick for the last few days, is improving slowly.

Robert Drake, book keeper for A. W. Thomson, the lumber man, is quite sick.

Mrs. Abe Mayer, who has been quite sick for several days, is able to be out again.

The Yerke residence, on Fourth street, is being remodeled and several improvements made.

The big heating boiler is being placed in position at the new opera house today. It is the largest heating boiler in the city.

Mrs. E. J. Zeigler, of the White Bear hotel, who has been quite ill for several days with malarial fever, is improving.

River five feet three inches and falling. The City of Vevay goes down tonight. The Lizzie Bay and Sunshine up in the morning.

Clerk Robert McAllister, of the Sunshine, who has been quite sick for several weeks, has again resumed his duties as chief clerk on that boat.

Henry Barlow, of West Fourth street, who was taken suddenly ill a few days ago, is but slightly improved. Kirk Barlow, his son from Cincinnati, is at his bedside.

G. H. Heinisch moved into his new store room in the new block recently built by him Wednesday night and Thursday morning, and is now ready for business.

Miss Maggie Neudoerfer, daughter of Peter Neudoerfer, is quite sick. She was operated on recently, this relieving her somewhat, and she has been improving the past day or two.

Mrs. James Weaver of Tenth and Gay streets entertained a number of friends last evening. Mrs. Weaver will go to Cleveland in a few days where Mr. Weaver is employed in one of the big barber shops of that city.

A HOT GAME.

That's What Padan's Traveling Men and the Denial Boys Will Produce When They Come Together.

The traveling men for the Padan shoe factory are organizing a base ball team to play the Denial club team. Arrangements are not yet perfected, but the game will probably come off some time next week. It will be an interesting one, the boys guaranteeing brilliant repartee, hot shots, blood curdling yells, etc., if there are no good plays. Ned Alger will umpire the first inning, which alone insures a thrilling start. The knights of the grip who will wield the bat will probably be Schilling, McCloud, Ware, Reed, Conroy, Winter, Cole, Gilbert and Farnham, and their enemies are Nichols, Miller, Molster, Higgins, Weiler, Murray, Tynes, Conroy and Williams.

COME ON YE BROWNS.

The Riversides Are Afraid of Us Polo Fellows and Now We Will Try You a Game.

The game of ball announced for next Sunday afternoon between the Polos and Pratt's Riversides has been declared off by the manager of the latter club. The Polos were quite anxious to have a game with the champions and have been working very hard in order to get a date with that team. The refusal of Pratt to play now is looked upon by the Polo manager as a mean trick. It looks as though he was afraid of the Polos.

As the Polos have no engagement for next Sunday they accept the challenge of the Kentucky Browns made in yesterday's TIMES and would like to make a date with them for next Sunday. Manager Martin of the Polos further says he will play "any club on earth, the Maysvilles excepted." In the meantime they will continue to claim the championship of the city until defeated by Pratt's team.

A SPECIAL MEETING

Of Presbytery Will Likely Be Held In a Few Days To Take Action on Difficulty In the Second Presbyterian Church.

The trouble in the Second Presbyterian church has reached such a point that some action by Presbytery will probably be necessary. As has been stated members of the church who considered that Rev. Gobiet was not treated fairly, have left the Second church and rented the Findlay street M. P. church building and have installed Rev. Gobiet as their pastor. The latter cannot accept this under the laws of the Presbyterian church, it is said, and a reporter learned yesterday that a special meeting of Presbytery to take action on his case was likely to be called in a few days.

The Reason Why.

Billy Maier's perennial smile and his sweet toned voice have been missing from the streets the past few days, for the very good reason that the versatile William has been trying to be sick and has been holding forth at home in bed. Nothing serious however.

Will Be Married Soon.

A gentleman of undoubted veracity informed a reporter this morning that George Clark was to be married soon. There are four George Clarks in town and the reporter is unable to say which one is meant, but is certain one of them will soon be trotting in double harness.

IN PORTSMOUTH

The Grand Lodge of the Colored K. of P.'s Will Meet in July, 1896—Secured Through Exertions of John Evans.

John Evans and Mr. and Mrs. Frank White returned on the C. & O. last night at midnight from Springfield, O., where they have been in attendance at the meeting of the State Grand Lodge of the colored Knights of Pythias. The lodge meeting opened Tuesday, and continued in session until yesterday. Mr. Evans was present as grand representative of Royal lodge of this city, and Mr. White as a grand officer. Others from Portsmouth who were present as spectators were Mrs. W. E. Ross, W. Gooden, Clifford Stratton and Pendleton Bird. The latter persons returned on the C., P. & V. today at noon.

Mr. Evans and his friends took an active part in the proceedings of the Grand Lodge, and made such a good impression upon that body that they had no difficulty in securing the next meeting of the Grand Lodge for this city, although several other cities were after it. The meeting next year will be held here July third to fifth, 1896.

Frank White, of Portsmouth, was elected grand master of the exchequer.

QUAY seems to be in the lead in ring ridden Pennsylvania. The combine with the Magee-Ward politicians of Pittsburg in the west and the Martin-Porter boodlers of Philadelphia is too much for the smaller cities, towns and counties. They are afraid to let them into the state treasury. This is about the condition of things in Ohio. The people are not anxious or likely to turn over the state treasury to Boss Cox and his gang.

The Virtue of "Kicking."

Mark Twain recently published an essay intended to induce people who are imposed upon to "kick"—that is, to protest vigorously against imposition—wherever and whenever they are annoyed by the thoughtless or boorish selfishness of others.

There can be no doubt that this advice is good and timely. Americans, more than foreigners, are tending toward submission to discomforts instead of curbing the license taken by the persons who cause them. Part of this tendency is due to a natural courtesy, which leads well bred men and women to be long suffering with those who have never had a chance to learn good manners, and part is due to an unwillingness to have trouble over a matter of no serious importance.

While a controversy with a stranger is not likely to add to one's comfort, there are many instances in which "kicking" becomes a duty. Particularly in travelling there are so many manifestations of indifference to the rights of others that "the railroad hog" has been classified as a distinct specimen of humanity. But many people are guilty of selfishness who are not naturally nor intentionally hoggish. They allow themselves unusual license thoughtlessly and gradually come to regard the privilege they have thus usurped as their absolute right. And it is against this class of misdemeanants that persistent and conscientious "kicking" should be done.

The man who brings a lighted cigar or cigarette into a railway station or car may not mean to be offensive; the woman who spreads herself and her parcels over four seats, and who perhaps lets her interesting infant occupy a couple more, may not think she is unreasonable; but each is undoubtedly lacking in an appreciation of the rights of others. No one likes to quarrel with the man who is nursing the butt of an ill smelling cigar; no one enjoys making the woman relinquish three or four seats she has not paid for; yet the oftener the people of whom these two are types are allowed to impose upon their fellow passengers, the more certain they will be to repeat their performances.

In the elevated trains and horse cars one may meet every day hundreds of men whose favorite attitude in their seats is a sliding sprawl, with one leg crossed over the other half way across the aisle. A glance into an elevated car will often reveal such an array of legs and boots that to reach the center of the car seems as difficult as a charge upon the chevaux de frise of a fortification. Occasionally a projecting bit of calf or russet leather is reluctantly drawn back to permit the passage of a newcomer, but as a rule the latter must take the chances of black and blue shins and soiled skirts or trousers in plunging over or wriggling past the obstructions.

Oddly enough, the sinners in this and other similar respects are not rowdies nor men unaccustomed to the conventional courtesies. Many, if not most, of them are well dressed and well groomed. They are not brutes, but merely ease loving, thoughtlessly selfish egotists, who seek their own comfort regardless of the rights of any one else.

Curiously they are more prone to resent criticism or fault finding than the genuine "railroad hog" would be. Yet they are the kind that needs to be made the object of energetic "kicking"—as much for their own good as for the public convenience.

A great part of the necessity for "kicking" by passengers would be obviated if railroad and steamer employes attended to their duty. The rules of transportation companies are broken frequently in the presence of the employes, who make themselves conveniently blind and deaf. Anything that is sober enough to buy a ticket and drop it into the box can take passage in an elevated train if care be taken not to "sass" the ticket chopper or the train men. And as for smoking in the waiting rooms and often on the cars, it is so common as to be lead to the belief that one of a station keeper's requisites for employment is a total absence of the sense of smell.

It would take a page of space to cite illustrations of the chief annoyances to which the public are subject by reason of the acts of selfish individuals. Every one knows instances of his or her own experience. The person who "kicks" resolutely and firmly, yet not offensively, is a public benefactor.—N. Y. Herald.

The Trade of a Year.

The fiscal year 1895, which ended on July 1st, was a bad one for export trade because of the enormous deficiency of the corn crop and the consequent reduction of meat products.

Nevertheless the complete figures are encouraging and satisfactory. In 1893, the panic year we imported $35,370,137 more goods than we exported. In 1894, a year of forced settlement, we exported $221,283,141 more than we imported. In 1895—the fiscal year is meant in each case—our exports exceed our imports by $61,592,699—a very comfortable "balance of trade" for a year of short crops.

During last June we imported gold to the net amount of $1,963,750 while during June, 1894, we exported net $22,376,872.

For the five months ending June last our gain of gold was $16,634,666 against a loss during the same period of the preceeding year of $58,900,616. Our gold gain in a year has therefore been not less than $75,000,000.

With improved and improving business, with confidence completely restored and with an assured promise of abundant crops—corn is estimated at more than double last year's production—the figures at the end of the present fiscal year will pretty certainly record a twelvemonth of almost unexampled prosperity.—World.

The World omitted to attribute the prospects for a large corn crop to the election of a Republican congress last year.

GREAT TALK.

Messrs. Roswell G. Horr and Wm. H. Harvey on Silver.

The Act of 1873 Which Demonetized Silver Under Discussion—Mr. Horr Denied That England Had Any Hand in the Act—Their Position Outlined.

CHICAGO, July 19.—The great debate on the coinage issue between Roswell G. Horr and Wm. H. Harvey, which commenced Tuesday, continued Thursday forenoon. The debate is expected to continue ten days. Mr. Horr is an ex-congressman from Michigan, but now resides in New York, and Mr. Harvey is the author of the much-noted book, "Coin's Financial School." Both have given the subject of discussion much study and are well equipped to present their views and the results of their researches.

ROSWELL G. HORR.

Mr. Horr, in opening, said the foundation of the discussion was Mr. Harvey's book, and he proposed to controvert many things said therein.

"I am not here as an opponent of bimetallism. I believe in the use of gold and silver as money to the fullest extent that can be done on sound business principles."

Mr. Harvey said that he was there to defend the facts and principles as presented in his book. He outlined the propositions he expected to maintain. The principal ones were that the silver dollar was the unit of value prior to 1873; that act of 1873 was surreptitiously passed. The free coinage of gold and silver prior to that time made an "unlimited" demand for both metals, and the option to pay in either restored the commercial value of the cheaper metal; that it is to the interest of this country to act independently in restoring free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1; that all prices of property and labor have declined in adjusting themselves to the gold standard; and that the conditions caused by the change will impoverish the masses of the people.

Thursday's debate was marked by considerable acrimony on the part of both speakers. In the opening exchange of personalities Mr. Harvey also said: "Mr. Horr and numerous employes of newspaper corporations and other corporations are in part, many of them, representing their honest convictions, and I accord that to the honorable gentleman of New York. Many of them never stop to analyze the question, the great principle that must make or unmake the republic in which they live. It is only a question of salary which they consider. You say that a man should better himself and if a better salary is offered him take it. Not for all the combined salaries in the world would I accept a position where I would have to advocate a principle that I thought would destroy the liberties of my countrymen. There is something in this life greater than money. When we again get the American people to believe this, and not until then, can we again have liberty in this land, and every man will have an opportunity to make a living without being deprived of it by the aggregation of selfish interests. The value of the debate Wednesday was this: A studied misrepresentation has gone before the people of the United States that there was only eight millions of dollars of silver coined by the United States government prior to 1873. Now meeting face to face with a representative of the other side of the question, this debate now carries to the people of the United States the admitted fact that there was $143,000,000 of silver coined prior to 1873."

W. H. HARVEY.

Mr. Horr took up the question of the origin of the law of 1873. He said it was drafted after consulting a large number of experts, who were apt to know a little more about the monetary question than those who had never stated it at all. He denied that the bill had its origin in England or anywhere except in the brains of the people who were looking after the coinage interests of the United States. He defied Mr. Harvey, not by assertion, to prove one single item that had any reference to the British people controlling or directing the matter. He continued: "Every step taken in the incipiency of this measure was as open as the light. Thousands of the bills were sent broadcast to all parts of the country. No one tried to cover up the fact that the bill, as originally drafted by Mr. Knox and endorsed by Secretary Boutelle, of the treasury, dropped the same dollar piece of the United Sates and changed the unit of value. All the letters of the experts and the report of Mr. Knox were printed by order of the senate.

Mr. Harvey: "Have you that bill and those letters with you and will you produce them during this debate?"

Mr. Horr: "I will if I have them. I am not sure if I brought them with me."

Mr. Harvey: "By examining the records of the day and the newspapers we find there was an era of corruption in congress at that time. Clinton Colgate confessed before the ways and means committee of 1873 to the use of money to influence the incorporation of special features in the internal revenue bill, testifying among other things, that Charles Sherman, of Ohio, a brother of Senator Sherman, had been paid $10,000 by the New York stock exchange in connection with the revenue bill. The fact developed that while the money had not been paid Judge Sherman had rendered a bill to the exchange for his services, as he claimed, for securing the services of his brother, Senator Sherman, to put the bill through. Judge Sherman was then a United States district judge.

After denouncing the attempt of Mr. Harvey to "smirch" the congress of the United States, as infamous, Mr. Horr said: "The people of this country—and the congressman is no exception—as an average upright, honest business man, I admit that Judge Sherman was guilty of a crime. He was never in any way connected with his brother, John Sherman, and you know it. They exonerated him. Judge Sherman resigned in May—they drove him from the bench. But what has that to do with the question? It was debated in the senate for three days. It came to a vote in the senate January 10, 1871, and passed by a yea and nay vote.

The senators from the Pacific slope voted for it, and Senator Sherman voted against it. The Fifty-first congress died without action having been taken on the bill.

Mr. Harvey continued his line of attack on the honesty of the congress and its employes in 1874, referring particularly to the charges of corruption made by individuals and the press against Geo. A. Bassett, clerk of the ways and means committee. The salary grabbing, which had to be repealed by force of public sentiment, was passed by the congress which demonetized silver. The people could understand a salary grab, but they could not understand a scientific spoliation of their rights. "To make plain how the fraud was practiced," continued Mr. Harvey. "I will read the sections as they stand in the law and include the words which were erased surreptitiously in its passage.

Mr. Horr (interrupting)—"By whom? What proof have you that anything was erased?"

Mr. Harvey—"I will get to the proof of that a little later. As the bill passed both houses the unit was on gold, and free and unlimited coinage of both metals was provided for. But, as enrolled, the mints were closed to free and unlimited coinage of silver, except as to the trade dollar, afterward abolished. The standard silver dollar was frequently omitted after the bill had passed both houses."

Mr. Horr: "Upon the face of his own bill there is a proof that to any man who has studied this question is conclusive. The whole attempt to prove that any such bill ever went from the house and senate is false. Does any man in his senses believe that they ever undertook to give free coinage of silver to a standard dollar of 384 grains. The old dollar was not reinstated, but the silver dollar was reduced in weight from 412½ grains to 384 grains and made a subsidiary coin like all the other silver coins of the United States."

On the request of Mr. Horr the debate was adjourned at 1 o'clock until Saturday next.

SUIT TO BE BROUGHT

Against the Bondsmen of Ex-Receiver Meade, of the Marquette Land Office.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Commissioner Lamoreaux, of the general land office, has placed the case of ex-Receiver Thomas Meade, of the Marquette, Mich., land office, in the hands of the department of justice to bring suit against the bondsmen for Meade for over $3,500, which he, while receiver, accepted from prospective settlers for lands, but never made entry of. The bondsmen are R. R. Goodell, R. M. Hoar, John Daniell, Charles Briggs and Daniel Crawford.

Commissioner Lamoreaux said Thursday that the homesteaders will not lose their lands on account of no entries being made of their applications as each one probably had a receipt to show that he had deposited money with the receiver for his claim.

Short Talks on Advertising.

[Copyrighted by Charles Austin Bates.]

A great many merchants cut down advertising in the summer. Some even stop it altogether.

In everyday life, when a thing is hard to do, it only calls forth greater effort. If the laborer can't move the stone, he gets a crowbar and a block of wood. He makes a lever—and the stone moves. If the crowbar isn't long enough he gets something longer. He doesn't give up, because the stone has got to be moved.

Same way in business. Trade is a stone. The funny thing is that the lighter it gets, the harder it is to move. It can be moved though. You may have to have the lever lengthened. Certainly you ought not to shorten it. The best business lever is advertising—newspaper advertising is the longest lever and the quickest to move trade.

Dull times are the times to put forth the greatest effort and the most money. People don't usually ask for what they have already. Advertising is merely asking for trade. When the store is full every day cut down your space. Don't expect that you will get a big trade in dull times, but keep count, and you'll find that the advertising was profitable. Profitable right at the time and enormously profitable after a while. The very fact that only a few merchants are wise enough to advertise in dull seasons makes it all the more profitable for those who do. You are there when others are not. It gives you greater prominence. It will make your advertising in busy times much more effective.

Common sense has a great deal to do with advertising. Think about it from a common-sense standpoint. It may take some "nerve" to pay out money for newspaper space when the business isn't paying expenses, but it will pay.

More than half the business houses in the country would be ahead if they could shut up for three months in the summer. But they don't do it. Why? Simply because they can't afford to. People would forget them.

Same way in advertising. Think about it.

A Physician Prescribes Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.:

My daughter Mattie, aged 14, was afflicted last spring with St. Vitus dance and nervousness, her entire right side was numb and nearly paralyzed. We consulted a physician and he prescribed Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. She took three bottles before we saw any certain signs of improvement, but after that she began to improve very fast and I now think she is entirely cured. She has taken nine bottles of the Nervine, but no other medicine of any kind.

$10.00 For Each Dollar Invested can be made by our System Plan of Speculation

Originated by us. All successful speculators operate on a regular system.

It is a well known fact that there are thousands of men in all parts of the United States who, by systematic trading through Chicago brokers, make large amounts every year, ranging from a few thousand dollars for the man who invests a hundred or two hundred dollars up to $50,000 to $100,000 or more by those who invest a few thousand.

It is also a fact that those who make the largest profits from comparatively small investments on this plan are persons who live away from Chicago and invest through brokers who thoroughly understand systematic trading.

Our plan does not risk the whole amount invested on any trade, but covers both sides, so that whether the market rises or falls it brings a steady profit that piles up enormously in a short time.

THE PROFESSOR'S DAUGHTER.

BY H. LYNDE.

(Copyright, 1895, by Irving Bacheller.)

To Hilgerd, staring out in the lighted space, the whole thing seems unreal, and of the nature of a play. Buoyed up by strong excitement, he is ready for anything, yet knowing not what is to come. Easily he conjectures up fantastic forms hovering over the prostrate bodies, and fancies he hears them moan. One—two minutes pass in painful suspense, then an unusual noise comes from the platform outside, and the back door is quickly opened with a bang. A heavy step is heard close by the partition, and a new actor appeared on the scene in the shape of a tall, powerfully built man. He stopped right in front of Hilgerd, and looked sharply around. His glances swept the floor, then rested on the open safe. With a few swift strides he was before it. He was heavily bearded, and around his waist hung a leather belt supporting holsters, from the tops of which loomed up threateningly the handles of a pair of deadly Colts. His motions were cat-like, swift and graceful. With deft fingers he transferred the money packages from the safe to a huge pocket in the side of his coat.

Again the nauseous odor came to Hilgerd as a large panel slid down in the south side of the partition. Beside Hilgerd Wharton crouched like a panther ready to spring. The robber had emptied the safe and was casting a last furtive, triumphant glance around. Quickly he stepped towards them. Now he was almost within reach, and another step brought him opposite the open panel. For one fleeting instant Hilgerd saw him turn as in surprise. Swiftly as the lightning's stroke Wharton's arm shot out. The robber's head crashed against the opposite side of the car and down he dropped, a helpless mass of quivering flesh. The door was thrown open and the guard rushed out. Hilgerd started to follow, but was motioned back.

"Not yet, Paul," said Wharton. The man was quickly handcuffed, then half carried, half dragged into the already close air of the closet. "Is he done for, Phil?" asked Wade. "No, but it would be simple justice if he was," answered Wharton, removing the insensible captive's coat and hat. These he donned and stepped around to the back door of the car. Hilgerd heard a peculiar whistle, and the panel and door were again closed. Wharton stepped and took a kneeling position in front of the safe. Bang! went the door again with a suddenness that was startling. Wharton motioned with his arm, keeping his face to the front. A shadow passed the curtain and Hilgerd scanned the newcomer closely. He was not so tall as his companion, and moved with a gliding, shuffling step. His shoulders were slightly bent, but their breadth indicated enormous strength. As he stepped into the full glare of the lamps something glistened in his right hand, and Hilgerd could scarcely repress a cry of warning. Wharton worked industriously at something in the safe. The man took another step or two then, as if satisfied there was no occasion for its immediate use, transferred the weapon to the other hand. As if by magic the scene changed, and they saw Wharton gazing into the eyes of the other, as he lay helpless on his back. It was a terrific spring, and the robber was down and his revolver wrenched from his grasp before he could utter a word or make a move. The second lay in sullen silence, the light of hatred in his deep-set, beady-looking eyes. Wade slipped back into the smoker and returned with three determined-looking men.

"There they are Sanders," he said, briefly; "two of the worst desperadoes in this part of the country. You have Mr. Wharton here to thank for the job, which, I must confess, was a neat one."

The sheriff gave some directions to his deputies, occasionally gazing with admiration at Wharton. The latter was packing his own coat and vest into his satchel, still wearing the coat and hat of the robber.

"We will take Mr. Sanders with us, Jim," he said, shortly. "I hope to be able to finish the work by morning. Good night." He picked up a lantern and Hilgerd followed him out onto the platform.

"We will now change cars, Phil," said Wharton. "I know it is not customary to perform this feat while flying through space, yet the sensation must be novel." They were whirling along at a clipping pace, the swinging motion of the car making it difficult to stand erect. The rails of the other track slipped past like silver threads. A board led out from the lower step and down this Wharton crawled fearlessly. He stopped, turned, and his lantern revealed the outlines of an ordinary-looking hand-car moving along with the train.

"I forgot my satchel. Please get it," he shouted. Hilgerd went back into the car, picked it up and threw the strap over his shoulder. It seemed to him like courting death to step from the train onto that flimsy-looking bridge, but he shut his jaws firmly, dropped on all fours and moved slowly out. The slight wooden connection rattled and swung viciously. He could not see, and nothing could he hear above the clanging roar of the noisy cars. The wind cut past him wildly; smoke rushed into his nose, and a burning spark stung him sharply on the cheek. Inch by inch he made his way, then a strong arm swung him safely over. He looked up and saw the sheriff's burly form pawing along so like a great bear that, in spite of the strangeness of it all, he could not repress a smile. Wharton swung the bridge back into its place, and quickly they dropped behind. The express car shot away, then the lights from the coaches danced by, the sleepy occupants all unconscious of the unseen drama of the night. With a final roar the heavy sleepers whizzed out of sight, and the adventurous trio sat speechless in a silence as deep as the tomb.

Hilgerd rubbed his eyes. "Phil," said he, "this tight rope business is dreadfully trying to a man out of training. Is there any more of that ahead of us?"

"It was difficult, and you behaved nobly, Phil," replied Wharton, laughing; "but we have some harder work before us. Let me first speak of this car," he continued "It is the handiwork of the gifted professor, and will easily run forty miles an hour."

"I beg pardon, but who and what is the professor?" asked Hilgerd.

"He's the devil's own, and the accomplished leader of the worst gang of train robbers in the country. He is well up in chemistry and mechanics, and the scheme we so successfully foiled to-night is his latest and most daring experiment. The band has a rendezvous back here in the black swamp. These two men waited for the train just this side of Benton's, and, running along with it they made fast to the lower brace irons. Boring a hole in the car, they inserted a tube on this metal reservoir here, and a deadly gas, a secret production of the Professor's, instantaneously pervaded the car. Then they moved the bridge back to the step, came in, and you know the rest. They looked through the window to see that their devilish plans worked successfully, hence the figures. It was the only way to outwit them and to get them into the car, and that was what we wished to accomplish. Our possession of this car is the key to the situation, and the only thing that will enable us to capture the Professor himself."

"Why, didn't we——" began Hilgerd.

"No, indeed!" exclaimed Wharton; "You don't catch the old gentleman risking his precious hide in the execution of his little scheme. You can wager he is safe at home, and that is where we will look for him." They moved rapidly for some time in silence. The car stopped at the first trestle over the river, and Wharton jumped out and walked toward the deep shadows at the edge of the thick timber. In a few minutes they saw him coming back.

"I have telegraphed the Professor over his private line to send all his men to Number One on important business" he said, "and I sincerely hope we shall find him alone." They removed the car from the track, climbed into a boat Wharton had concealed, and were soon threading the maze-like channels of the great swamp. Sanders rowed while Wharton steered.

"Paul," he said, presently, "you have never heard of the Professor's daughter?" Hilgerd shook his head slowly.

"Of course not," said the other, thoughtfully, "and if you knew her you would not believe that such a charming, refined person could possibly be so related. She was educated in a notable convent, and is extremely intelligent. In some diabolic manner he lured her away, and now keeps her imprisoned in the center of this beastly swamp, with no companions but these brutal cut-throats. Of course she is dying by inches, and it's a burning shame. It was here where Newell came in discharge of his duties, and I am almost convinced that he was caught attempting to rescue her and was either killed outright or is suffering a confinement worse than death. I have utterly failed to discover the slightest trace of either of them, but I am determined not to give up until I learn something definite." They conversed in low tones until the boat, passing through a narrow channel, crunched upon a sandy shore. They climbed noiselessly out. Some distance through the thick undergrowth, Hilgerd caught the first glimmer of a light. Towards this Wharton slipped off silently, while the others remained, sitting on the side of the boat. The minutes passed, with painful slowness, and Hilgerd was becoming restless, when the sharp crack of a breaking twig caused their blood to surge. Wharton's voice, speaking softly through the gloom, reassured them. His manner indicated an excitement that with him was unusual. He came quite close before speaking.

"Boys, the game is in our hands. He's in the cabin and alone. Make no noise, and keep close to me." In single file they crept stealthily toward the light, which soon grew more distinct, and Hilgerd saw, through a little opening, the window from which the rays came. They moved forward cautiously. The door was partly open, and through it could be seen the figure of a man seated at a table. His head rested upon his hands, and before him lay an open book.

"Hatching up some new species of devilry, I suppose," Hilgerd whispered. A dozen steps and the threshold was reached. With a sweep of his arm Wharton flung back the door and stepped inside. The man turned with a startled face toward them, and sprung swiftly to his feet, his hand instinctively seeking his side.

"Be careful, Professor. Just raise your hands above your head, please." Wharton's voice was calm and soft, but in it was the menace of the adder. The Professor hesitated, glancing from Wharton's steady eye to the frowning muzzle of the big 45-Colt, then back again. There was no mistaking the signs; a chance was out of the question, and up went his hands.

"Thank you," said Wharton, sweetly. "Paul will kindly relieve the gentleman of those ugly-looking guns, and Mr. Sanders will attend to the ornaments." Hilgerd took a good look at the man as he sat in a chair against the wall. He had a smooth face, with high forehead and piercing blue eyes, and there was much in his appearance to suggest the criminal. He had not fully recovered from his surprise, and was looking wonderingly, though defiantly, at the others.

The cabin had a board floor, and there was a cheerful wood fire burning upon the hearth. A rough table, four chairs, some bunks in a corner, a looking-glass, and some shelves completed the furnishings. Without losing any time Wharton stepped to the back part of the room, felt carefully over the logs, and threw back a small panel, disclosing an opening from which he drew forth a rusty tin box.

"Do you remember the Coopertown bank robbery?" he asked Hilgerd, who was standing near. Hilgerd nodded. "Well," continued Wharton, "here is the result of that night's work." The Professor moved uneasily in his chair, eyeing them murderously beneath his drooping lids. Wharton then opened the door of a little closet, and in it they saw a woman's hat, cloak, and some dresses. He glanced significantly at Hilgerd, and examined them closely.

"It is as I feared," he said, whispering, "They have not been worn for some time." Then he pointed to some dark red stains on the garment, shaking his head slowly.

Hilgerd had taken a cigar from his case, and was approaching Sanders to borrow a match when the latter uttered a startled grunt and half rose to his feet, staring in dumb surprise over his shoulder. Hilgerd turned swiftly. The door was still standing open as they had left it, and right in the center, framed in the deep black of the outer night, stood the burly form of a man. Over his shoulder the light fell upon the delicate face of a woman, whose large blue eyes opened wide in astonishment.

In the few seconds that passed it was impressed upon Hilgerd that the man was roughly dressed, and that his head was covered with a black felt hat. But it was the evil face that stamped its image most clearly. Astonishment was depicted in every feature. Beneath unkempt hair glared loweringly a pair of treacherous eyes. For a brief second he stood like a statue. Then Hilgerd caught the gleam of a light on a long, blue barrel as his arm swung swiftly upwards. There was a deafening crash—another, and yet another, almost blending in a continuous roar. The smoke hung thickly, but through it we saw Wharton's lithe shape bounding towards the door, and two more reports rung out in quick succession.

Sanders was standing up uninjured, the same bewildered look upon his face. Clearly, the pace was too swift for his sluggish nature. It was all over in a moment, and then Wharton came in, stifling an exclamation of disgust.

"Reddy Simms," he exclaimed, "a bad man, but a worse shot. The gang probably forgot something and he came back for it, hence the little surprise. I need not ask if you were hurt, for there is one bullet in that log and the other, with which I had a passing acquaintance, you will find about three feet to the right, just grazing that nail."

"But the other shot, Phil," Hilgerd cried. "Surely I heard three. And what is that bright red streak doing on your hand?"

"The second was mine," answered Wharton, briefly. "It's a pity it went wild. He is badly winged at any rate, for he dropped his gun just outside the door, and it bears evidence of a disabled owner. I heard him leap on his horse, but could see nothing. Was that your daughter, Professor?" turning suddenly upon him.

"It was, and she'll fix you for this, too," came the answer, with a positive nod and a glance of deep cunning. Wharton looked at Hilgerd and they stepped out of the door.

"Paul," he said, "this is beyond me, and I cannot understand it. He is either lying or I have been greatly deceived. I am entirely at sea about Newell. Come, we must secure the boat, as it is our only way out of this rat hole, and the gang will be here now in short order."

As they rushed down to the landing, the sound of splashing oars struck dismay to their hearts. Dashing through the thick brushes they arrived just in time to see their boat moving rapidly away. A woman's form was swaying with the oars and a woman's laugh came floating mockingly back across the space.

A flash, a sharp report, and Hilgerd felt the blood trickling down his arm which the bullet grazed.

"We are in for it now, Paul," cried Wharton. "There is only one way out of this trap by land, and that is along the trail those devils took; come!" He darted swiftly toward the cabin and Hilgerd followed, stumbling blindly along the uneven path.

A CAVE-IN.

Six Hundred Tons of Earth Suddenly Gave Way,

Burying a Number of Workmen in a Sewer Excavation.

Two of Them Were Instantly Killed, One Fatally Injured and Two Others Frightfully Maimed—Eleven Saved by a Shelf Formed by the Timbers.

NEWARK, N. J., July 19.—Two men were killed, one fatally injured and two others frightfully maimed by the cave-in of 600 tons of earth in a sewer excavation at 3:15 o'clock Thursday afternoon.

Dead—Dennis Ryan, aged 40, of Bowery street, Newark.

George Vilas, 38 years, of East River street, Newark.

Injured—James McDonald, 40 years old, of 72 Bowery street, Newark, both legs broken and internally injured. Taken to St. Michaels hospital, Newark; will die.

James Tarraby, 19 years old, of Monroe street, scalp cut, left arm broken. Taken to hospital.

Thomas Brennan, 50 years, cut about body.

The men were working twelve feet below the surface in a sewer on Jersey street, near Fourth. They were with sixteen others. The sides of the excavation had been improperly braced Thursday morning and Wednesday night's rain had undermined the sewers. Without warning 600 tons of earth gave way, carrying down bracing timbers and rock upon the laborers. Eleven of the men were saved from death by a shelf formed by the timbers. Ryan and Vilas were buried out of sight. McDonald was buried head foremost in the dirt and pinioned down by plank. Tarraby and Brennan had their heads above the surface. McDonald was pulled out unconscious, but revived. It was 4:30 o'clock when Tarraby and Brennan were extricated, and half an hour later the crushed and dead bodies of Ryan and Vilas were brought to the surface.

CONTRADICTORY.

A Report of Dandridge's Death and an Equally Authentic Denial.

Probable That He Is Living and Improving —Remarkable Record, a Murder, Suicide and Accident All in One Day— Effort to Indict the Wounded Man if He Survives.

The Chillicothe News of last evening is authority for the statement that Ed Dandridge, the man who was stabbed by Ed Taylor at the fair grounds Tuesday, died yesterday afternoon. A railroad man who passed Dandridge's home this morning says, however, that he is improving and is out of danger. The authorities and attorneys here have received no news of his death, and it is probably a false report.

The News also contains an account of a suicide and an accident in the Dandridge family the same day, making a flood of troubles seldom equalled. A brother, William, was thrown from a horse at Columbus and is lying in a critical condition at the the hospital in the capitol city. Shortly after receiving word of this the sister who resides in Chillicothe received news of the stabbing affray here, and a few moments later received a letter from a sister at Wellstor, stating that an uncle, with whom the mother had been living, had gone suddenly insane a few days before and had disappeared, and it was thought had suicided. Word was received that he had suicided at Berlin, Ohio, but no trace of the children could be found, and it was feared the demented father had murdered them and secreted their bodies.

Floyd McCormick, esq., who will defend Ed Taylor, the man who stabbed Dandridge at the fair grounds, has been investigating the case the past few days and it is probable will make an attempt to have the wounded man indicted by the next grand jury. It is claimed that the assault on Taylor was premeditated and planned and that the insulting remark which precipitated the assault was intended for that purpose. It is also claimed that threats had been made against Taylor, and Dandridge may be indicted for assault with intent to kill.

A BIG THING.

The Annual Meeting of The U. S. League of Managers of Building and Loan Associations.

Ohio will be highly honored by having the annual meeting of the United States League of local building and loan associations, which will be held at Cleveland July 24th. This meeting will bring together the best talent engaged in the management of these associations in all parts of the United States. Papers on live subjects will be read by delegates from Boston and Maldon, Mass., Philadelphia, New York, Elmira, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Hannibal, Omaha, New Orleans and other points. The Cleveland associations will entertain the delegates by an excursion to Put-in-Bay and dinner on board the steamer. This meeting will doubtless be a very enjoyable one for persons engaged in the management of building associations.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

Prof. Tolbert Will Make a Balloon Ascension and Parachute Jump of 10,000 Feet.

Prof. A. L. Tolbert's treat to the little folks yesterday was appreciated. They flocked to see him and his combination in large numbers. The grand stand was packed, and the cheers that went up in deafening strains showed the excellence of the performance.

Tonight he gives another entertainment under electric light. Also tomorrow afternoon and tomorrow night. Sunday afternoon at four o'clock he will go up in his monster 85 foot balloon and make a leap for life at an altitude of 10,000 feet. Everybody should attend his performance and see the balloon work.

The only charges will be ten cents for grand stand and ten cents for carriages. The grand stand charge will be collected at main entrance in order to do away with the rough and tough element.

John Richardson Goes to the Same Church, Sits in the Same Pew and Hears the Same Minister Heard 30 Years Ago.

Letters received by relatives of John Richardson, who is now sojourning in Ireland, state that he is enjoying himself hugely taking in the sights of his boyhood. A week ago last Sunday Mr. Richardson went to church in the same building, sat in the same pew, and heard a sermon from the same minister that he heard just before he left Ireland 25 or 30 years ago. Mr. Richardson will remain in Ireland several weeks yet.

KNOWN HERE

Is This Kentucky Farmer Who Has th Finest Crop of Tobacco in Three Counties.

It is claimed that Mr. Jas. T. McCormick, of Poplar Flat, this county, has the finest crop of growing tobacco within three counties. Our author informs us that we can say that it is one of the finest crops in Lewis county. Mr. McCormick seems to be strictly in it this year as he has his last year's crop of about 10,000 pounds. This with a 12 acre growing crop of such flattering prospects, is certainly encouraging to him.—Vanceburg Sun.

The Mr. McCormick mentioned above is known here, his family having been frequent visitors at Dr. George Fisher's.

And That's How It Comes That the Rev. Daniel Is in Jail.

The Tolbert Scrappers in the County Battle—Two Very Young People Who Want to Get Married—823 Births in the County Last Year—News in and About the Court House.

Daniel Webb, of Washington township, was locked up in the county jail last night in default of bond for his appearance in common pleas court at the next term. He was arrested on the oath of Leonard Smith for carrying concealed weapons, and was recognized to the higher court by Squire J. R. Foster under $300 bond.

Harry Beyrou and Edward Taylor, the members of the Tolbert aggregation, recognized to common pleas court for their connection with the cutting of Dandridge, have been transferred from the city prison to the jail.

THEY ARE NOT OLD ENOUGH.

A very youthful would-be groom applied in probate court this morning for a license to wed a very youthful would-be-bride. The boy, Richard Bostwick, who is but seventeen years of age, brought a note from his mother consenting to the marriage. The girl, Sarah Donaldson, is about sixteen years old. The boy was informed that he would have to grow a year or so before he could assume the responsibilities of the head of a family, notwithstanding the parental consent. He was very much disappointed, but "the law's law", and the couple will have to prolong their courtship another year at least.

A SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

Edmund Cole, a Farmer Living Near Scioto, Almost Loses a Leg Through An Accident While Mowing.

SCIOTO, O., July 19, 1895.

Edmund Cole, a venerable resident of this vicinity, met with a serious and painful accident yesterday while mowing. He was surrounding a field, and while endeavoring to make the turn next to the fence the knife bar caught in the fence and broke the swathboard. He got off his machine in a hurry to get the board, and carelessly put his foot down in front of the sickle, when the team made a move and started the sickle enough that it caught his shoe and held him fast until they made a swing, starting the knife again and cutting everything to the bone from behind, including the large tendron running up the ankle. He was helped upon one of the horses and allowed to go home, while they took the other and went for the doctor. Dr. Sampson was found and hurried to the scene, when he tied the severed vessels and then dressed the wound. Mr. Cole, when seen by your correspondent, was resting easy, but it will be some time before he will be about again. He says he does not make a business of getting off his machine without unslipping it, but he was in a hurry, and the swathboard being gone and the knife-bar hid in the grass, he did not realize that he was in danger until caught.

THE OUTLOOK.

The Fair Directors Met Yesterday and Compared Notes.

Jersey Cattle Added to the Premium List—And the Dear People Are Not Forgotten —The Poultry Men Get a Professional Judge and a Load of Straw— No Straw, No Show—Missionaries Sent to Chillicothe and McArthur.

Interest in the coming county fair is growing daily. The meeting of the fair directors Thursday afternoon was very much on the congratulatory order, and at the same time much good work was accomplished.

Secretary Draper announced that entries in the speed class had already commenced to come in. Never before in the history of the fair had entries been made so early, nor had so many premium lists been called for.

Among the many special attractions offering services, are a fully equipped vaudeville theatre who propose to put up their own building on the grounds, the Cincinnati athletic club offers an evening's fistic entertainment by sixteen prize fighters and wrestlers of more than local reputation. The Cincinnati zoo offers to furnish a wire rope performer who does incredible feats on a wire in mid-air. A pack of racing greyhounds want on the program, and a dozen other entertainments of a novel and unique character are offered, some of which will probably be provided for on the program. It was decided to offer a series of gifts to visitors to the extent of one hundred dollars in cash. The grand gift will be fifty dollars, the second twenty-five, the third fifteen and the fourth ten. With each admission ticket issued on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the holder will receive a cupon which will entitle him to compete for one of the gifts. The grand distribution will take place at three o'clock Friday afternoon, and will be awarded from the judges stand. The successful number must be presented on the grounds, at the judges stand, before 6 o'clock p. m., Friday, the close of the fair, otherwise they will be void.

The beautiful Jersey cattle were also kindly remembered by the directory. They had been omitted from the premium list. It was decided to offer the following prizes:

Bull two years old or over, first $6, second $2. Bull one year old, first $4, second $2. Bull calf, first $3, second $2. Cow two years old and over, first $4, second $2. Heifer one year old, first $4, second $2. Heifer calf, first $3, second $2.

Messrs. Grimes and Smith were instructed to provide a telephone service.

Sanford and Thompson, managers of the flower show, were authorized to make all necessary arrangements for a magnificent floral display. Thompson had been interviewing the chicken men. They wanted a professional judge and President Doty had made arrangements for the employment of an expert judge under the American Poultry association rules. They also wanted plenty of straw, or as he put it, "no straw, no show." A load of straw was ordered. These straws show that the wind is blowing steadily in the direction of a greater exhibit of fowls than was ever shown here before. The poultry association will provide accommodations for five hundred birds.

Kinney and Duis, managers of the fruit department, desired the main hall to be turned over to them three days earlier this time. They will need that much longer time to prepare for the proper display of the great exhibits of farm products and fruit.

The directors of the household fabric department, Messrs. J. L. Watkins, Jr., and A. T. Holcomb, Esq., have appointed the following committee of young ladies to take charge of the work in this department: Misses Sara Reilly, Anna Evans, Hope Watkins, Allie Higgins and Lizzie Kearnes. They will see to it that all the articles in this class are properly arranged and artistically displayed. Each of them have had past experience in the work, an assurance that the art and fabric departments will be tastefully arranged. They are also at work soliciting and encouraging their friends to make exhibits. But do not wait to be called upon or spoken to in this matter. This is everybody's fair. Especially does it devolve upon the ladies of Scioto county to join in making it a brilliant success. The ladies are reminded that they can each receive a copy of the premium list by addressing Edgar F. Draper, Secretary, Portsmouth, O.

THE RIVERSIDES.

Interesting Sketch of Portsmouth's Famous Ball Club.

Members of the Club Who Have Since Become Famous But Still Are Enthusiastic Fans—Some Great Games Played by the Team—Suggested by the Recent Visit of the Reds Here.

The following from the base ball column of the Cincinnati Post this morning will be of interest to many Portsmouth people. It is a brief history of the triumphs of a famous ball team.

Up in the state nearly every follower of the fortunes of the diamond kings is rooting for the Reds to win. If the good wishes of their out-of-town constituents could cut any figure in the championship race, Cincinnati would land that bunting. Last week's tour through the Buckeye state was in the nature of a continuous ovation. Nearly every fan who cheered them has a line on the percentages and is as well versed in the progress of the race as the 33d degree city crank, whose only glimpses of grass are gained at the ball park.

Portsmouth sent down several car loads of rooters who were among those who mourned at the late defeat of the Reds, encompassed by Senator Abbey's great work. When the national game was in pinafores, Portsmouth claimed one of the greatest baseball teams in the land, and at least three of its members are now numbered among Cincinnati's substantial citizens. The crack of the bat is still as delightfully musical to their ears as it was in the days of their youth, when

THE RIVERSIDE REDS

Licked about all the crack amateur teams in the country, and gave Harry Wright's famous '69,ers the greatest scare they had during that year of unbroken triumph. Portsmouth loves base ball as well today as it did when J. J. Glidden was the pet of the box. Will Lodwick, the city passenger agent of the B. & O. S-W., played center field for the Riversides in that game that Charley Sweasy saved in the ninth inning by a home run with the bases full. Richard L. Cannon, member of the House of Representatives from Hamilton county, in the last General Assembly divided his time between short stop and right field. "Legislator Dick" is still a "fan" and he never tires of living over again those lively days at Portsmouth. There was probably never a team organized with so many in the ranks who afterward got to the political front. Jas. W. Newman, who was once Ohio's secretary of state; Judge A. C. Thompson, ex-member of congress; Judge J. J. Harper, of Washington C. H.; Col. O. F. Moore, ex-member of congress, and the late Hon. Wells A. Hutchins, also a member of congress; the late Col. Robert N. Spry, prosecuting attorney of the county; the late George Johnston, president of Portsmouth's national bank; Charles Soule the artist, and John W. Lewis, twice sheriff of the county, all chased the horse-hided sphere over the Portsmouth field.

When the Lone Stars, the champions of the South, came up from New Orleans their triumphal tour was interrupted by the Riversides. The Holts, of Newport, the greatest rivals of the Syracuse Stars, were compelled to surrender to those Buckeyes. Representative Cannon's reminiscenses are very interesting: "Before the days of the leagues," said he, "the Riverside Reds won a championship in a baseball tournament given at Gallipolis. There were twelve clubs entered, Gallia, Middleport, Racine and Buffalo, W. Va., were among them. I'll never forget the game which the Cincinnatis won. Two bad errors lost it to the Riversides. An easy fly was knocked out to Newt Huddleston. He scooped it off the ground, but the crowd thought it had been caught, and swarmed all over the field, cheering like mad. Harry Wright appealed to 'Bud,' and he said, 'I didn't catch it.' Actually the crowd groaned when play was resumed. Huddleston afterward explained his failure to connect with that fly by declaring: 'I couldn't locate the ball. All I could see was the air, full of telegrams, "The Riverside Reds have beaten the great Cincinnatis!" The climax came when Riley at short muffed a little fly, and after his error six runs were scored, and we were beaten 29 to 27. In those days the Bockfords, Athletics, Mutuals and Nationals all visited Portsmouth. In fact, the Atlantics of Brooklyn was the only famous team that did not tackle the Reds, and Harry Wright told Bob Ferguson that he was afraid to make the trip."

Nails Advanced in Price.

Wire nails have taken a wonderful jump in price within the last few days. They have advanced nearly 100 per cent. within the last sixty days. This advance is caused by a combination formed among the billet manufacturers to control the market. The recent increase in wages of the employes of all iron works throughout the country has also had a tendency to advance the price. Cut nails have also gone up at less proportion but are expected to go much higher in a few days.
